THE NATIONAL WATER-LINE. The surplus of the United States grain crop which reaches the scaboard is estimated at two hundred millions of bushels, or about five million tons, annually. The quantity which is placed on the market for consumption, and participates in one move-ment from the producers' hands is esti-mated at avelundred million bushels more. In addition to this grain movement, the pro visions, live stock, fuel, cotton, sugar, man ufactures of all kinds, make an aggregate tonnage almost beyond computation. The present average cost of moving this tonnage on the New York canals is about eight mills per ton per mile, and by the New York railways two cents per ton per mile. The great desideralum of the present moment is the achievement of a possibility of moving all heavy tonnage between the Mississippi valley and the seaboard by water and ste as cheaply as rafts of logs can be towed she present will continue at Tenth and D through a lake. Such a route would act as through a take. Such a route would act as a governor and regulator of rates of freight on all competing lines, and afford a complete protection against extortion. It would be a grand thing, indeed, to have a continuous water line, navigated by steamers, from St. Paul and Memphis and Omaha to Hamplon roads, free from ice eleven months in the year, and carrying a ton of freight at the rate of two to three mills per mile.

In preparing the present edition for the press, in preparing the present edition for the press, in a secondingly been the aim of the editors to brin fown the information to the latest possible date and to furnish an accurate account of the most recent discoveries in science, of every fresh production in literature, and of the nevest inventions in pregion record of the progress of political and his original events.

The work has been begun after a long and eareft reliminary labor, and with the most ample re ources for carrying it on to a successful termina on. None of the original stereotype plates have bee sed, but every page has been printed on new type priming in fact a new Cyclopedia, with the asm lam and compans as its predecessor, but with a freater peculiary expenditure, and with such in revenents in its composition as have been any useful by longer experience and calarged know illustrations which are introduced for the The illustrations which are introduced for the sit interior in the present edition have been added not the sits of pictorial effect, but to give greate editive and force to the explanations in the text hey embrace all branches of science and of naturalities, and explanations in the text hey embrace all branches of science and of naturalities, and exploit the most finance and explanations of society, architecture and ext, as well as a various processes of mechanics and manufactures. Although hiteroded for intrinction rather than inbellishment, no pains have been appared to itsue act artistic arosalization; the cost of their execution enormous, and it is believed they will find a well entered the edition of the cycle edits, and worthy of its high character. This work is solid to subscribers only, payable of elivery of each volume. It will be completed in text large octave volumes, each containing about pages. Inly, illustrated with several thousand cood Engravings and with numerous colore ithographic Maps.
